Consulting the latest psychiatric glossary ended my research. A majority of psychotic patients once housed in mental hospitals are now found on public roads.

It's our business

I am calling about the breast-baring women. If I had the chance to go to the park last Saturday, I would have joined them for sure. I am all for it, not against it. I think that we should do it. It is our business and nobody else's.

A lack of respect

I can't believe these women that want to bare their breasts. Don't you women have anything better to do with your life? To waste time putting you people on TV was a big laugh. Why don't you worry about other things in life and start acting like a lady should. And to you men who agree with your wives baring their breasts. You only show your lack of respect.

Why bother with will?

When parents name a godparent for their child they have taken into consideration more than just blood relations and affection. Along with love, there is lifestyle to consider. My children's guardians were named specifically because I knew their lifestyle would approximate how ours would have been. These people were chosen over blood relations because I want them, not my 70-year-old father, caring for two preschoolers. If wishes are to be disregarded especially in view of a fit godparent, bother leaving a will?
